Boston Skipper Refuses 1/2 Cent a Pound for Catch— State Takes Notice

Fishermen of the schooner William S. not only gave away more than 5000 pounds of fish to all who came to take them at T Wharf, in Boston, the other day, but they, perhaps unwittingly, also gave impetus to a state inquiry into possible ways of placing surplus catches of the finny food be-fore the public at low prices on days when the market is glutted.

Charles H. Adams, chairman of the Special Commission on Necessaries of Life, has written, as a result of the incident, to Edmund Dun, president of the New England Fish Exchange, to ask whether the exchange has done anything to open the way for direct-to-consumer sales of fish when there is an oversupply, and whether it has considered establish ing outlets in congested parts of the city, where fish may be purchased in such times at a price that will cover at least the fisherman's cost of the

SUMMER OUTINGS ON TIRES

Ossibly it is but natural to think of LEE of Conshohocken only as makers of good tires.

Yet the products from our two big plants such as fire and garden hose, transmission and conveyor belts, floor coverings, tiling, matting, etc., are known and used the world over.

23 acres of floor space are necessary to turn out the hundreds of rubber products made by Lee which find their way unheralded into almost every home and factory.

It takes a small army of craftsmen to do this work, and it takes technical skill of a high order to keep each item uniform and up to Lee standards.

We believe no other manufacturer watches the processing of his product with so many meticulous laboratory analyses and road tests. These are Lee habits of long standing.

This is your assurance that every

CLEVELAND, O .- Directors of the American Peace Society are struggling with the problem of drafting a peace program consistent with reports presented by various study com- on mutual respect and reciprocal missions and amended in vigorous style by the world conference on in-ternational justice during its concluding deliberations.

The presentation of the report on international implications of justice provoked considerable hostile critieism and was finally amended over the protests of members of that particular commission.

Prof. Phillip M. Brown, Princeton University, spokesman of the commission on international implications of justice, declared that his group had refrained from recommending the adherence of the United States to the World Court in view of difference of opinion as to the form of that adherence.

For the same reason Professor Brown said his commission had not Report Called Inadequate

When the question calling for the adoption of this report was put to the House a dissenting opinion was vigorously expressed by William E. States and Canada.

Fourth, permitting and encouraging extracurricular student activities such as cosmopolitan clubs and inter national student organizations, and, fifth, making the most of the contri-butions of university life that may come from the different national groups among the students. Nicola Sansanelli, president of the International Federation of War Veterans, addressed the closing session of the conference. Mr. Sansanelli, while recognizing the value to peace of political and diplomatic machinery, nevertheless stressed the need of educating the masses of people in the things that make for peace.

Atmosphere of Brotherhood Speaking of the Locarno treaties, Dr. R. J. Alfaro, Minister of Panama, been written out of a sense of fear on the part of contracting states and that world peace, on the other hand, must be developed in an atmosphere of brotherhood and human affection. "Let us not forget," he said, "that war is not the only manifestation of force. There may be oppression without armed struggle and rights

The National Conference on Valuation of American Railroads was formed by progressive groups several years ago, and is headed by Mr. Norris. Mr. Richberg appeared in its behalf in the pending case before the Interstate Commerce Commission and in the lower court. The railroads have appealed from the lower court decision, which upheld the commission's ruling on the determination of valuation for rate-making and recapture purposes.

According to the Norris resolution he court decision in the case may make a difference of many billions of dollars in the aggregate valuation of the railroad properties of the country, with a consequent differnce in transportation rates amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars. The issues involved, the resolution stated, are of "wide and exmense consequence to all the people of the United States."

CLIMATIC RESEARCH

Under the supervision of Prof. Robert DeCourcey Ward of the department of climatology at Harvard University a comprehensive study of climatic conditions in North America and the West Indies will be made by terms of an award received from the Milton Fund for Research.

Professor Ward believes a new book is needed which will describe conditions of differing climates all over the world. Professor Koppen of Vienna is undertaking a part of the task and Professor Ward has been invited to prepare the chapters on North American and West Indian phases of the subject. He will have as his associate Dr. C. F. Brooks of Clark University and two assistants will help collect data. One man will go to Mexico City to gather information and the other will perform a similar task in Toronto.

Dr. Wilson Declares

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR KANSAS CITY, Mo .- An international prohibition program was presented before the Methodist General Conference under the auspices of the board of temperance, prohibition, and public morals, the Rev. Dr. Clarence True Wilson of Washington, introducing speakers from Japan, India, Central Europe, Germany, and Mexico who in turn recorded prohibition progress in the lands from which they came.

Dr. Wilson, who is seeking to engage Clarence Darrow in a debate before the General Conference, served a warning to the political parties.
"If you want to keep the church out of politics," he said, "both parties must put into their platforms definite declarations of their program of law enforcement and nominate men who by their records, words, and acts can he trusted to carry out that program "If any party neglects to do that and nominates a known nullificationist we, the church, will unite for the defeat of that party and that candidate. There are enough of us to do it.'

Venetian glass bubbled and rippled in jewel-like colors, and charming French and English untinted glass vases and beakers in unusually interesting forms, so desirable for interiors furnished with old walnut or

Tile-Top Tables, Breakfast Services and Trays

The tile-top coffee tables that have just arrived from Spain have a mood of pleasantry that is most beguiling. Their frames are reproduced from old examples and the tops are of actual old Alcora tiles patterned with whimsical birds and naïve landscapes, droll peasant figures and vegetables from the kitchen garden-all with a note of farce and satire that seems to be peculiarly their own - in very bright chrome greens, yellows, blues and browns.

Modernist breakfast trays by Vera Choukaeff of Paris, have also a note of comedy in the Chauve Souris manner, and are

Mr. Rose-brook has deliberately sought experience in all phases of musical leadership, from the variest vaudeville to seasons of opera stock; this experience has given him an authority in the art of staging productions that has made him valuable to Ziegfeld and the Shuberts, and finally the logical music director of the St. Louis Municipal Opera. The mounting of the operas is in the hands of Alonzo Price, another specialist, who has been in the em-ploy of Henry W. Savage and Arthur Hammerstein, and has staged works for them both in America and in Europe.

The repertory for this season is composed, for the most part, of modern works, which are to be given through a season of 12 weeks, beginning June 4. Following is the beginning June 4. Following is the complete repertory for the season: "Princess Flavia," "The Merry Widow," "The Vagabond King," "No, No, Nanette," "Rose Marie," "The Student Prince," "The Lady in Ermine," "The Song of the Flame," "Countess Maritza," "The Love Song," "Mary" and "Alda."

Any author, old or new, classic or dern, illustrious or otherwise, provided he meets the literary taste and the peculiar needs of the reader, can afford similarly ineffable moments. Young Hudson in South America, craving the poetry of rural England, found the material for his nourishment on the shelves of a secondhand book dealer in the Argentine metrop olis: Thomson's Seasons was his first purchased book and so dear it was to him that he could never pass a copy afterward without wishing to buy it. He did not compose verses on the subject, as he was well qualified to do, but he set the story of his dis-covery and delight into one of his charming essays where it bears imperishable witness to the never-to-be-forgotten event. This is the essay, as I recall, in which he celebrates his discovery of and admiration for the so-called Suffolk poet, the long-forgotten author of The Farmer's which was his second book and no less his mental sustenance in the land of far away and long ago. He could not, or at any rate did not, speak of these experiences without

Barnes Broke Record With Emergency Pole

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Los Angeles IN SETTING a new world's record pole vault mark of 14ft. 11/2in., Lee O. Barnes used a bamboo stick 21/2 inches shorter than the height

The University of Southern California track captain said he cracked his favorite pole, one 14ft. lin. in length, shortly before he broke Sabin W. Carr's 14ft. lin. record. Instead of taking a longer pole to go after the mark, he resorted to a 13ft. 11in. stick that he has packed along all season to use in case of emergency.

Barnes' vaulting form is a bit peculiar in that he holds the pole about two feet below the height he expects to clear. He believes that 15-foot poles and other long sticks mean just so much extra weight to carry in running up to the bar. Part of the secret of Barnes' success lies in the speed with which he approaches standards and crossbars, and Dean B. Cromwell, his coach, says that his speed is considerably aided by the use of a comparatively short and light pole.

In the loss column the Yankees and Athletics still maintain the same number of defeats at five. But the Yankees have won 17 to Philadelphia's 13. The only change in the actual standing of the league was the moving up of Boston from last to seventh to, displace Chicago for the second time.

New York's victory over Cleveland, 7 to 6, was a real ball game, and it took the Yankees 10 innings to win. Gehrig's home run with three on bases in the sixth inning gave the league leaders a four-run lead which looked big, with Hoyt pitching in fine form. But one run in the seventh and tour in the eighth gave the Indians a one-run lead which the Yankees tied up in the ninth. In the first half of the tenth, Cleveland had three men on bases with one out, but could not score. Uhle, who shut out the Yankees tied up in the ninth and again in the tenth when they won the game. Salary Advances and Additional Facilities Are Included

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU NEW YORK-Urgent need for additional funds to meet increasing de mands for library facilities and to provide salary advances for the staff is revealed in the report of the New York Public Library for 1927 just made public. The report emphasizes not only the need of additional service in existing libraries, but also the demand for new library buildings in communities where population is increasing rapidly and library facilities have been inadequate. It asserts that erection of the Hunts Point Branch Library will absorb all the unexpended balance of the Carnegie Gift Fund and the Library will then be "without resources that could be used for the extension of the branch

E. H. Anderson, director of the a New York Public Library, summing up the overcrowded conditions which exist at the central library in 42nd street, says in the report:

He declared additional space is needed not only for storage of books, but also to accommodate library workers. The report shows more than 4,000

000 persons used the Central Library building during 1927—an average of about 11,000 a day.

The number of books issued for home use by the circulation depart ment through its 44 branches, the extension department, including nine sub-branches and the Library for the

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR.

CHICAGO, May 12—Wheat prices crumbled and broke even more rapidly this week than they advanced the previous week.

Over-bought conditions in the pit was unmistakable on the advance, and heavy profit-taking following May 1 estimate checked the advance decidedly, and the market failed to recover more than temporarily from more than temporarily from

Stock Market

With the federal reserve rediscount rate unchanged and the week's increase in brokers' loans less than $80,000,000, the tone of the New York stock market has been one of assurticed and the week foreign.

Stock Market

With the federal reserve rediscount rate unchanged and the week's increase of 91 issues, 42 issues (or about 46 per cent) were foreign; and in 1927, of a total net increase of 93 issues, 62 issues (or about 66 per cent) were foreign.

Foreign news has not been of ask higher prices from merchants for special importance, but crop reports new orders. The patterns for next indicate the outlook is for a less than spring are also being prepared, and it average crop of wheat. enthusiasm prevalent in the local cloth market for the previous three weeks slumped this week, with the sales total dropping from the recent weekly average of 60,000 pieces to 40,000.

The small buying has been mainly of sateens, twills and 36-inch constructions. Sateens sold in small lots at 11 cents for the 4:37s, 10 for the 4:770s and 11½ for the 110 by 68s.
Bids of 10½ cents for the 4:37s in fairly large quantities were declined.
Prices on practically all styles have been decidedly firm.
Some inquiry for broadcloths and lawns is reported by the fine goods mills.

Elmer H. Bright & Co., Boston; From the point of merit and the prospects for the balance of the year, the rails appeal to us as being most attractive.

Schirmer, Atherton & Co., Boston: The business outlook is very satisfactory. Nevertheless, it appears unwise to accumulate a general line of securities at this time, particularly in view of the fact that the reserve authorities are frowning on current speculative activities, Railroad stocks, however, still seem undervalued and attractive for the long pull.

The Power of Public Diplomacy

THE world is today witnessing an invaluable experiment in public diplomacy. It is an experiment dealing with the common enemy of all nations, war, and its outlawryan experiment which may add to the framework of international law a peace-preserving treaty of great effect. Those who have followed the crisscrossed thread of negotiation which has marked the development of the Briand-Kellogg project for the renunciation of war have seen this project pursue its course from a casual newspaper interview until now the text of the treaty itself has been placed formally before the governments of Great Britain, Germany, Italy, Japan, France, and the United States.

Introduced in the public press, made imperative by public discussion, and advanced through the channels of public negotiation, the treaty even in its present status ably supports the claims of open diplomacy. Its rapid progress from a newspaper statement by M. Briand to a multilaterial treaty by Mr. Kellogg testifies to the force of spontaneous public opinion which supports it.

The extensive interchange of notes between Paris and Washington has enabled the two governments to agree upon the basic issue, namely, that the treaty should embrace all the principal nations-and the whole world if possible-instead of only France and the United States, as was first proposed. In thus extending the scope of the treaty, however, France has insisted upon qualifying its terms so that a nation's earlier treaties and its commitments under the Locarno agreement shall not be adversely affected. Having undertaken a network of pacts of mutual defense with the smaller European countries, she is quite understandably disinclined to alter them.

These reservations are not a bar to the conclusion of the treaty. Secretary Kellogg in his address to the American Society of International Law expressed the conviction that Franco-American differences of opinion can without serious difficulty be reconciled. The right of self-defense, Mr. Kellogg holds, is inherent in every sovereign nation, and he suggests that if the parties to the Locarno pact will adhere to the outlawry-of-war treaty a double security against the violation of the Locarno treaties will be attained. The state of both official and public opinion as reflected in the dispatches from correspondents of The Christian Science Monitor, indicates that Great Britain, Germany, Italy, and Japan all view such a treaty declaration sympathetically, the German Government having delivered its formal acceptance to Washington.

Thus far the processes of public diplomacy have proved themselves competent to carry on a negotiation which would once have been consigned to secret if not surreptitious correspondence. In following day by day the debate over the Briand-Kellogg project, one present disadvantage of public diplomacy should be appreciated. The tendency is to give the greater emphasis to the points of conflict, and thus the disagreements are mirrored more prominently to the public eye than the agreements.

In the current negotiations it is to be hoped that the agreements will prevail.

Mr. Rockefeller Chooses

SEQUEL to the investigation in Washington into the leasing of the Teapot Dome oil reserve has been written by John D. Rockefeller Jr., the chief executive and directing official of the Standard Oil Company and its subsidiaries. His particular contribution in this instance is in the form of a request to Col. Robert W. Stewart, chairman of the board of the Indiana Company, to resign his position. Mr. Rockefeller explains his action by stating it as his belief that Colonel Stewart, in his testimony before the investigating committee, convinced him and his associates that the best interests of the company would be served by Colonel Stewart's resignation.

Public interest in this incident will be divided. no doubt, between the apparent desire of the Rockefeller interests to purge their allied organizations of all influences which do not accord with their declared policies, and the ability of dominating forces in the organization to dictate the personnel of what are declared to be independent or at most only subsidiary companies. The issue which has been joined is said to mark the first test of strength, so far as the public is aware, since the so-called dissolution of the Standard Oil trust by the order of the United States Supreme Court entered in 1911.

Whatever may be the outcome of this particular test of strength, there will remain the gratifying assurance that an end has come to the theory long held by big business that its affairs were of no concern to the public. The younger Rockefeller was one of the first to indicate the abandonment of this fiction. It has been shown that no business in which it is essential that friendly contacts with the public be maintained can continue to develop and prosper unless it enjoys the confidence of those with whom it deals. Repeated proofs have been furnished to establish the fact that this confidential relationship between big business and the public cannot exist where powerful industrial or financial interests selfishly interfere in politics or in government. Without such interference or attempted meddling, the once dreaded trust no longer arouses the destructive animosity between employer and wage earner, or between the masses on one side and vested interests on the other.

Organizing for Trade

THE meeting in Paris of the Permanent Bureau of the International Automobile Constructors is expected to bring to the front a much better understanding than has heretofore existed among the automobile manufacturers of the world. The industry of the United States, through its able representatives, is in a position to clear away much of the misapprehension which is alleged to have existed in the thoughts of some of the European manufacturers as to the possible competition for markets. Reports which are current indicate that at the rate exports are now proceeding nearly 200,000 United States motortrucks valued at $200,000,000 will be sold in Europe during 1928, this number representing about double the number of trucks sold by United States makers last year in Europe. Foreign manufacturers are reputed to be greatly discouraged at such an outlook and are said to have been discussing plans whereby they can check the inroads made by the American car.

Among the various schemes which have been under discussion is one to organize a cartel of the European manufacturers. This is said to have originated with Dr. Ugo Nanni, head of the Isotta Fraschini Company, in Italy. Latest reports indicate, however, that Dr. Nanni has decided to abandon the plan, and it has been alleged that his decision was predicated in no small degree through the fact that United States capital had found its way into Italian plants. United States bankers are said to have advanced $10,000,000 to the Fiat Company. What has been done in connection with the Italian automobile industry, however, is no different from what has happened in connection with other industries in Europe. United States capital has been rather freely invested in these and similar undertakings, and it is natural to expect that such investments would not have been possible had there been any serious idea of ruinously interfering with the trade in the products of United States industries.

In place of a restrictive or a protective cartel, therefore, the world is destined to see a trade organization for mutual protection. This is a situation which is the natural outcome of the diversification of investments by United States bankers. There is undoubtedly a place for all legitimate producers of automobiles, and it makes no difference what nationalities they happen to be. A removal of restrictions on markets would undoubtedly broaden the consumption of all manufacturers. The European manufacturer is welcome to adopt the American methods of production used by manufacturers of the United States, and it is not inconceivable that he could be assured of just as broad markets if trade restrictions as between the various European states were removed or reasonably modified. A thorough airing of these problems, with an effort to correct them, promises to do much for the automobile industry both in Europe and in the United States.

The Merchant Marine Bill

ENCOURAGEMENT for the shipbuilders and ship operators is seen in the Jones-White bill, recently passed by the United States House of Representatives and scheduled for consideration by the Senate at an early date. While avoiding an actual subsidy, it provides for compensatory payment for carriage of foreign mails, authorizes loans for new construction at 214 per cent, in trust, prescribes that the ships may be taken over by the President in time of national emergency, and makes other minor provisions of a timely nature, such as that of requiring government officials to use United States ships when traveling on official business.

Perhaps the bill, as passed by the House, is not as comprehensive in scope as the shipping fraternity may have hoped for, but it is a definitely constructive forward step in the solving of the problem of the merchant marine. It affords prospective shipowners an opportunity to borrow money far below the commercial rates of interest; it holds forth the promise of an assured earning power through suitable mail contracts; it provides for a merchant marine naval reserve with payment to officers and men by the Government in addition to their regular compensation by the operators, and opens the gate to a substantial loan to the projectors of the line of fourday transatlantic ships, to whose interests it is widely intimated the provisions of the bill will be helpful. The former clause requiring unanimous decision by members of the United States Shipping Board in sales of vessels is modified to make a vote of five members all that is necessary, thus meeting an objection of the President to the former clause.

All of this augurs well for such new ship construction as the Merchant Marine Bill may stimulate. For three-quarters of a century, the United States has permitted foreign-flag ships to monopolize its ocean-borne freight and passenger business. Constructive acts such as the one which the House has just passed should tend to correct this situation.

Economies and Politics

THE Economic Consultative Committee which was established by the Council of the League will meet at Geneva on May 14. It consists of close on sixty experts representing more than twenty countries, who were selected by the Council of the League in December to meet annually and review the economic situation in Europe, thus following up the work of the International Conference. Taking the resolutions of the International Economic Conference as the basis of its work, the consultative committee will endeavor to arouse public interest and to mobilize the economic forces of Europe for a fresh effort in the direction of the removal of trade restrictions and barriers. So far the results of the economic conference of last year have proved disappointing, for beyond the removal of certain minor prohibitions as the result of the conference on import and export prohibitions and restrictions little advance has been made toward greater freedom of trade. Europe has still several millions of unemployed, and the standard of living for its working classes is far lower than that of the United States. All that can be said is that if the Economic Conference had not taken place the situation might have been worse. But there has been so far no lowering of tariffs, although the new Franco-German commercial treaty may be taken as a hopeful sign, while at the same time certain improvement may be introduced into tariff nomenclature as the result of a conference on that question, Also, the removal of the restriction on the output of rubber is a step in the right direction.

There will be a full and frank discussion at the meeting of the committee of the economic problems which face Europe, and especially of the effect of the great international combines in the heavy industries and in silks and chemicals. It is felt that such co-operation between the industrials of different nations may do much to mitigate the hampering effect of high tariffs, and that industry on a large scale offers the best hope for cheapening production, for this should facilitate the rationalization of industries and improved methods of distribution. Moreover, the mitigation of national rivalries by a federation of the chief industries appears to make for better relations between nations. But there are also certain dangers in such combines both for workers and consumers, and the consultative committee will try to insure that they shall not be used for selfish ends. For this purpose the committee will endeavor to collect and co-ordinate all the information which can be obtained as to output and costs of production

The intimate connection between economics and politics is now understood, and the aim of the committee is to work out a solution of the problem of placing the economic relations of Europe on such a footing that acute rivalries and jealousies in the economic sphere which have so often led to wars in the past may be eliminated. It seems a self-evident proposition that a nation cannot hope to increase its prosperity at the expense of other nations, but the world is still very far from understanding its economic interdependence.

A Musical Jubilee Reunion

CENT of wild thyme and sound of lyre! A Massachusetts hillside is to be Pernassus again next autumn, the Berkshire Festival being announced for revival after a lapse of three seasons. In fragrancy and vibrancy, the muses are to return to South Mountain, in Pittsfield, to preside for a moment in the little wooden temple that was built in their honor just before the end of the war.

The Library of Congress Festival of Chamber Music having firmly established itself in succession to Berkshire, the original idea is to be celebrated by a sort of jubilee reunion. Listeners who doubted for the safety of the cause of Mozart, Beethoven and Schubert in America when the flag was first raised over the temple terrace, and artists who have wandered, like truants, for riches and fame, since the fiddles were struck up in Beethoven's E flat major quartet, opus 127, on a September afternoon ten years ago, will be reassembled under the beams and rafters of the temple auditorium.

Possibly nothing outside regular concert routine will happen; nothing, perhaps, more unusual than has taken place from the day the joiner drove his last nail in the platform and the painter laid his last dab of blue gray on the sashes of the French doors, until the present. For scarcely so many scenes of an exciting description have developed in the whole course of forty festival sessions, if that is the correct number, held on South Mountain and in the Library of Congress from 1918 to 1928, as have been counted at a single meeting of the International Composers' Guild in New York. For the programs provided by Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge, whether directly at Pittsfield, or indirectly through the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation at Washington, have obviously been intended to set a general standard rather than to urge a special cause. Classic works chosen for presentation have been such as would be appropriate with a serious audience anywhere. New works produced have been the best that composers the world over could be encouraged, on basis of prize or stipend, to

It is said that the harp, an instrument that gave brilliance to the festival of 1920, will be heard again at the jubilee. It is supposed that the latest Schönberg quartet, still unknown in America, rights of performance belonging to Mrs. Coolidge, will be in the schedule. In which case, something extraordinary not only may, but quite likely will, go into the festival record.

Drifting Down the Tigris

SAY "drifting" advisedly, though, as a matter of fact, we are a little stern-wheel steamer of the usual river type equipped with machinery of sorts. But inasmuch as the current alone moves us at the rate of four miles an hour and our engine accelerates that comfortable pace but about two miles, our voyage is not inaccurately one of drifting, drifting with the current even as did Tom Sawyer and his strange companions down the Mississippi. However, it would be manifestly absurd, as well as altogether impracticable, to attempt haste on the Tigris. For the Tigris, mark you, is a peculiar and temperamental sort of river. Being very ancient indeed and having seen more than one civilization rise and wane along its banks, it is entitled to the respect due venerable years and it demands that respect. It also insists upon the right to change its course at will and on no more notice than overnight.

It claims the privilege of meandering here and there and wherever it likes across the country, through the desert and among the rushes, with no regard whatever to the directions laid out for it upon the maps. That being the case he who would travel it must be content to pick his way cautiously and without impatience, lest he find himself upon a mud bank or sand bar, there to remain for who knows how many hours or days.

4 4 4 Nevertheless, at the season of the year when the melted snows from the distant mountains far to the west have fed generously the ancient river, it is possible to navigate with a fair degree of assurance, and to make the journey from Bagdad to Basra in something over three days if all goes well. It is one of the three means at present available of accomplishing this stage of the overland journey to India, and altogether the most interesting.

I am, as it happens, the only European passenger. In fact, I am the only European on board the little Ishan. The captain is a stalwart Arab of dignified mien. A moment ago he paused by the door of the tiny saloon within which I was typing and regarded me curiously. Up to that time he had barely unbent at all as we passed now and then on the deck. But now, noting the facility with which I manipulate—and with two fingers, too-my little portable machine, he plainly concludes me a man of achievement and worthy of acquaintance. So having acquired here and there a word or two of English, he utilizes them in a wholly unsuccessful attempt to clear up the mystery of why I am here, the sole European, why like the tourists, I have not gone by the train or by the even swifter airplane, where I am ultimately going-and who on earth I may be anyway!

However, the hopeless tangle of words is presently abandoned with mutual smiles of good will, and the captain, with a final lingering stare at my strange tool of trade, goes forward to see how far the temperamental Tigris has wandered from its channel of yester-week. + + +

I am the only European, I say. But these Irak Arabs find very friendly. There are a number of them on board as deck passengers. Some, I learn presently, are Christians; but neither in appearance nor raiment do these differ from the Moslems. One of the Christian Arabs has ensconced himself comfortably amid his multifarious belongings in a warm corner near the boiler. Each time I pass he smiles and touches his forehead in token of amity, until at last I am fain to pause.

Delighted, he eagerly prepares me a comfortable seat on cushions, lights a tiny oilstove and prepares refreshments. He, like the captain, has picked up a few English words in Bagdad and he strives worthily to satisfy his ever-mounting curiosity about me. But my Arabic is confined to such words as are necessary to free me from the clutches of guides and vendors here and there, and I am able to do little more than indicate to my Iraki friend my proposed destination.

However, like the Shanghai ricksha coolie who never risks losing a fare by admitting ignorance of the desired destination, he nods an affirmative to everything I say and we get on delightfully, while the other deck passengers gathered wonderingly about. The Arab has a most beautiful string of real amber beads which I admire, for I have never seen anything like them. He puts them into forehead, and I am not sure that he does not mean to make me a gift of them; but I can scarcely accept such generosity and I return them, with a very self-conscious imitation of his ceremonial.

This region through which we are passing as we drift down the Tigris is not far from being the oldest known to recorded history. Were we to rise a few hundred feet in an airplane we could see the sites of Babylon and Ur and Kish and many another Semitic or Sumerian city. And yonder, almost on the river's very bank, is one of the most amazing ruins in the entire world. It is the great arch of Ctesiphon, rising 130 feet from the level plain, its hard-baked bricks and tenacious mortar having withstood the ravages of twenty centuries.

+ + + Part of the immense walls of some wondrous palace cling to it, and in their shelter are the huddled huts of an Arab village with the flocks and herds grazing quietly about. All through the afternoon, as the river bends and turns, the great ruin is in sight; and at sundown it looms through the purple haze in the far distance, like a huge landmark of time itself in a land where time is measurable in factors of centuries.

Of a truth, this is a land in which time, as Europeans reckon it, means little. See these Arabs here and there at work in their fields, laboriously raising the water from the river into shallow irrigation ditches, pounding the grain before their black tents, guiding their sheep and goats from one scanty bit of sustenance to another.

They have never seen a timepiece nor a newspape nor a pair of European boots. The only thing of the world they have seen is this little slow-moving river steamer; and as she passes they gather wonderingly at the riverside, the children screaming with delight as at a new and wonderful toy, the elders standing silently with arms folded beneath their voluminous garments.

Now and then, when we are so close to the bank that one could easily and safely step ashore, an Arab lad rung by our side, holding out a bunch of some sort of green vegetable in the hope of effecting a sale. Sometimes there is a river fish, and at one village stopping place the Arabs come aboard with fowl and vegetables and strange native condiments. On the afternoon of the second day we stop or several hours at Kut where, in April, 1916, General Townsend was compelled to surrender his entire army to the Turks. And though the Turkish triumph was shortlived, yet a memorial of the event stands even yet by the riverside. 4 4 4

It is a considerable town of the desert, having even a few decrepit motorcars and electric lights. And its name, unknown fifteen years ago, has now its place in history because of the six months' stand here of 10,000 courageous Englishmen.

Beyond Kut the river narrows, being in places but fifty yards wide, even in the flood season. Attached to either side of the little steamer is an oil barge on its way to Basra and the tankships from Europe. In the rapid urrent the manipulation of these becomes increasingly difficult and we swing from bank to bank in most amazing fashion. Fortunately the banks are precipitous and we are able to scrape along first on one side and then on the other, sometimes parting lines as the barges bring up with a thump, often drifting sidewise for some distance, now and then plowing away a portion of the bank, and always with a wild clamor of shouting, advice, instructions and comments-but never ceasing to drift down the ancient river toward our destination.

Through all these proceedings the Arab captain stands upon his bridge, dignified, imperturbable, apparently not in the least concerned. He has been through it all before, and he is well aware that it is a sort of navigation with which one does well not to grow impatient. One of two things will certainly happen; we will get there or we will not. So why get excited?

In the early days, before the Arabs along the banks became accustomed to the sight of this strange contrivance of the white man, they did not at all approve. Sometimes they even shot at it. But that is all past. They realize what the Englishman is doing for them and they are friendly. And so it is safe and agreeable nowadays my hand with a bow and a smile and a touching of the I to go drifting down the Tigris. M. T. G.

USCOVITES enjoyed the unusual experience of snowballing each other during the Easter holidays, which were observed here a week later than was the case in western Europe and the United States. A midwinter blizzard developed during these days and gave the city an appearance of Christmas rather than Easter. This did not, however, affect the usual features of the celebration: the throngs of worshipers in the churches on the night before Easter; the continual ringing of the city's innumerable church bells, which lasted far into the following week, and the vast and widespread consumption of the traditional delicacies of the season, paskha (Easter cake), an extremely rich preparation of cheese and raisins, and mulitch, a lighter cake quite similar to the raisin bread of the United States.

A number of German illustrated magazines have recently invaded the Moscow news stands; and amusing pictorial contrasts are the result. While the Russian magazines choose for front-page pictures as a rule only the most definitely proletarian types-workers in the typical Russian collarless shirt and heavy boots and peasant women with kerchiefs over their heads-the German women's magazine, Die Dame, displays the most advanced European styles, and another German publication shows some eminently respectable "Herr Doctor Professor Geheimrat." arrayed in a dress-suit, a costume that in Russia has become almost as extinct as the dodo.

+ + + The Commissariat for Education has decided that education against the drink evil must begin in the primary schools. As a means of advancing this end, teachers are urged not only to give direct talks on the harmfulness of alcohol, but also to set problems which will stimulate the pupils themselves to thought on this question. So in arithmetic it is suggested that sums may be taught by asking the children to calculate how much bread or cloth might be bought for a given amount squandered in the purchase + + +

Relations between the Soviet and Greek Governments have been far from smooth recently; and some of the main controversial points at issue were brought out in the press when one of the Greek diplomatic officials in Moscow addressed a letter to the official Soviet newspaper Izvestia in reply to some editorial comments which appeared in the latter publication. The chief Greek grievance is that while Greece absorbs a certain quantity of Soviet oil and other export products, Russian markets are almost closed to Greek articles of export. As a remedy for this state of affairs Greece desires that the Soviet Trade Commissariat would engage to buy stipulated quotas of the most important Greek goods. The Soviet contention is that, while the actual Soviet-Greek trade balance may be passive, from the standpoint of the latter country, Greek shipping companies make considerable profits by carrying goods to and from Russia's Black Sea ports. The dispute between the two states has been prolonged and at times acrimonious: but it seems unlikely that the Greeks will denounce the existing diplomatic relations. Greek colonizing and commercial interest in the Crimea and southern Russia dates back to ancient classical times.

About a hundred United States college students are expected to visit Russia this summer; and the Russian Society for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries is making preliminary arrangements for their accommodation. The students will travel through the country in small groups. Summer is always a time when foreign visitors to Russia become more numerous; the more serious type of 'investigator" predominates among these visitors, because very few tourist sightseers are inclined to include Russia in their European itinerary. To those who enjoy magnificent scenery and native picturesqueness Russia's natural summer resorts, the Caucasus and the Crimea, offer rich attractions. But hotel accommodation is apt to be primitive, to say the least; and Russia shows little tendency to develop into a "tourist country."

Pronunciation of the Letter. "U"

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

The recent discussion in the Monitor of the pronunciation of the word ingenuous gives to me the chance to take up the cudgels in behalf of a favorite topic of mine: the pronunciation of the letter u. In one of Webster's editions he wrote: "The use of the long u after l, r and s is pedantic and didactic." During the last forty years opinion has swung from one extreme to the other regarding the poor little u. Some grammars and kindred books on English diction feel as strongly on this matter as I do, as witness one by F. Townsend South wick—and a very good one it is, too—which states: "Careless speakers often say 'dooty' when they mean duty . . . one of the marks of a well-educated person is his careful enunciation of this much-abused vowel u." He agrees with Webster, you see, as quoted above. So far, however, I have not seen any books on the subject give the exceptions where u should be given the long sound after l, r and s, seen in such words as salutary, deluge and issue. The rather unthinking incon sistencies of the near-educated are seen in the giving to the u the double o sound in such words as multitude, nutrition, avenue, etc., and the contrary pronunciation of abstruse as abstr-youse, and of true as tr-you!

cannot close without adding that the feature is most interesting and instructive-it has cleared up for me the pronunciation of several words of which I was in doubt. Sylvia F. Metcalf. New Orleans, La.

The Movies and the Spoken Word TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

Allow me to express a tardy though very sincere admiration for the instructive and most enjoyable series of articles by Mary Pickford. They have made me wonder if the readers and subscribers of the Monitor all realize the high value they are receiving for the time and money

Miss Pickford's articles were to me most illuminative and quite as enjoyable as her work on the screen. I say this notwithstanding that I do not place pantomime in the theater on the same plane with the spoken word. believe that speech is the method of expression which places men above what is termed the lower animals. Miss Pickford with all her art, even in its latest and most developed stage, would find much difficulty in expressing her interesting and helpful story of the movie world without the medium of words.

Let us be grateful that she has given us so much that is human and beautiful through both mediums. Seaford, N. Y.
